BACKGROUND:

Explore the multidimensional process of aging through a behavioral science lens, emphasizing how scientific knowledge and technological advances shape health, independence, and social participation across the lifespan. Examine the interplay of emotional, physiological, and socio-cultural factors affecting aging, focusing on age-related changes in physical and cognitive function, exercise adherence, motor control, and health equity in later life. Assess how scientific innovations influence cultural views, societal values, and real-world challenges in promoting lifelong well-being.
